OVER THE PINE CLIFFS.

The summer vacation has just come to the Pine Cliffs school up in the mountains in New Mexico. As the boys and girls of the higher grade arranged their books in convenient bundles for carrying them home, they discussed the tempting prize offer made them by their teacher.

To test their ability to apply the knowledge that they had been acquiring, during the term, in their extra study, geology, Mr. Clarke had offered as a prize for the best collection of specimens gathered in the canons and mountains near their homes, three beautiful companion books, the poems of Whittier, Longfellow and Holmes. The village of Pine Cliffs was near a gold mining camp, and specimens of turquois and garnet had been discovered lately. So the place was especially fitted for such a contest. The youthful competitors would have the months of July and August in which to make their collections, and on the first Monday in September each would be expected to bring the geological products of their mountain tours all properly classified and named.

I'll bet David Elliott wins the prize! exclaimed one of the younger boys, as a slender youth of fifteen with a bright, manly face and blue eyes, passed him with an armful of books.

No, he won't returned Harry Erwin, a dark-eyed boy a little older than David. There are a few in the class just as smart as Elliott.

David Elliott's face flushed hotly at the contempt in the tone of the speaker, but he pushed back the angry words which struggled for utterance.

Always so unkind and contemptuous when he mentions my name, David said to himself, and I try so earnestly never to give him the least cause to be so.

You'll see that I shall beat him in bringing in the finest collection, continued young Erwin, in a boastful way. I don't really care for Mr. Clarke's prize. My father is able to buy me a cartload of books, if I want them. But I'm going into the contest just to down David Elliott.

Why, Harry, he's your own cousin, said Jessie Cardwell, in gentle reproach.

Cousin! with the utmost scorn. Thank you, Jessie, I do not own the relationship.

David Elliott was a boy of spirit and it was no easy matter for him to curb the bitter retort that rose to his lips.

But instantly he recalled the words of Holy Writ which he had found so helpful, on many trying occasions, in assisting him to control his hasty temper:

Whoso keepeth his mouth and his tongue, keepeth his soul from trouble.

It was the loss of temper that caused the long estrangement between Harry's parents and mine, he often told himself. Anyone who gives way to it, becomes a wretched slave. Then he would ask: Dear Lord, help me to control myself, and let me not be ruled by my mouth nor tongue.

The repeating of that proverb gave David the courage to pass by Harry Erwin without a word or even a resentful look. Saying good evening to his classmates he hurried away to his home, which was an adobe dwelling on a small fruit farm, a mile distant from the village.

Jessie Cardwell's words were true. David Elliott and Harry Erwin were cousins, but because of the long estrangement which had existed between the two families the relationship was not owned. Some of the school boys, however, seeing that Harry was disposed to be irritated by the connection often tauntingly plagued him about his poor cousin.

Several years before, David's father and Harry's father, married to sisters, had started life in the mercantile business in a town in Tennessee. For a time they had prospered exceedingly. Then came a time of reverses. Mr. Erwin was not a careful buyer, and good-hearted Mr. Elliott credited too much. In a short while the firm was obliged to suspend.

Instead, however, of making the best of a bad situation, each began to accuse the other of having brought on the crash by his ignorance of good business methods. Neither seemed willing to admit his share of the blame. Both were quick tempered, and they were soon drawn into bitter quarrel. This led to a separation of the two families, between whom the warmest ties of friendship had existed.

Then without even a farewell word to their relatives, Mr. Elliott and his family joined a party of home-seekers going to New Mexico. Here, in a fertile little valley, on a mountain stream, which supplied water for irrigating purposes, he had started a small fruit farm. But prosperity came slowly in that strange land, and the Elliott family could boast of only the simplest comforts of life.

In all the years that had gone by since that angry quarrel not a line had been exchanged between the estranged families. Indeed, one did not know where the other was living, until, a year ago, Mr. Elliott, who had amassed considerable wealth from his mines in Arizona, came to Pine Cliffs to accept the superintendency of the new gold mines near that village. Later his family arrived, and so it was that Harry and David attended the same school.

Time had done much toward softening the bitter feeling between the families, but inherent pride kept each from making the first advance which might have led to a reunion.

David, however, did not encourage this family pride so much, and had Harry Erwin met him half way the boys would have been friends. But Harry was spoiled to a great extent, and his father's success puffed him up not a little. Then he had heard enough of the old quarrel to make him think that his parents had suffered great wrong at the hands of David's father.

Although David never complained of Harry's treatment of him, Mr. and Mrs. Elliott learned of it through the younger children, and they immediately resented it.

Tom and Eliza have got rich in the mines, and they think it's very smart to let their boy run over and make fun of his poor relations, Mrs. Elliott had said angrily.

Never mind mother, David would return quietly, I don't let it annoy me, so don't let it worry you.

That is because you are such a thoughtful Christian, David, she would answer. Then with a sigh: I know I let my hasty temper rule me too often.

Mr. and Mrs. Erwin were unaware of the lofty and scornful manner in which Harry was treating David at school, or they might have drawn different conclusions.

Ben and Harriet don't seem inclined to be friendly, Mr. Erwin remarked to his wife.

No, returned Mrs. Erwin. I think it's Harriet's place to call first, if she is willing to make up.

Of course it is, he approved. I met Ben the other day riding up the valley, and he didn't offer to notice me. If they'd be friendly I'd help them. But it isn't my place to go out to his house and coax them up.

No indeed, in a proud tone. You won't catch me coaxing them to make up. Then Harriet's children seem to fuss a good deal with Harry. I don't think they want our friendship or help.

And yet how bad it is for relations to keep up strife this way.

Yes, agreed Mrs. Erwin. It's a poor example to set before children, I know. But if Ben and Harriet will act so offish we can't help it.

And in that way the matter would be excused, and so the gulf had widened again.

With less of self and more of the love of Him who hateth strife such troubles between families would never occur.

After vacation began both David and Harry were very busy among the rocks, trying to collect as many different geological specimens as they could.

It was one sultry day in August that the two boys met on the rugged pine-dotted cliffs, about a mile up the canon from the village. Each had a small, stout bag to hold his specimens, and a hammer with which to chip off a bit of rock here and there.

Harry was in the act of descending a dangerous cliff, when David, seeing his purpose, came up and looked over the deep chasm below.

You surely are not going down that cliff? said David, speaking kindly.

Well, I surely am, replied Harry in a half-mocking tone.

It is too dangerous to risk, warned David.

Maybe for a coward, returned Harry scornfully, as he reached down over a sharp point of the cliff to grasp a stunted pine. There are fine smoky topaz down here, and I'm going to get a fine lot of specimens for my collection.

No boy likes to be called a coward, and David's face flushed half-angrily. He had to repeat his proverb twice to himself, before he could conquer the temptation to answer back.

He was walking away from the cliffs, when a wild cry of fright from Harry arrested him. Hastening back, he saw that the daring boy, who had treated his warning so contemptuously, had lost his hold on the pine and was falling down the precipitous slope.

For about forty feet down, the cliffs were almost perpendicular. Then there was a narrow, dizzy ledge, overhanging a wild chasm, two hundred feet below.

As Harry shot downward he raised a white, terrified face to David bending over the cliffs above him. When he struck the ledge he managed to grasp a dwarf evergreen, and thrust one leg through its crooked, half-exposed roots. But as he did so his head came in contact with a projecting rock, and he quickly became insensible.

The dwarf tree swayed downward under the boy's weight, and the edge of the ledge began to crumble and shatter over into the chasm. It was a most perilous situation, for the tree threatened every moment to give way and hurl poor Harry to a terrible fate on the jagged rocks below.

David realized that nothing but immediate help could save Harry, and, full of peril though the undertaking was, he resolved to attempt the rescue. There was no time to run down to the village and ask aid.

Throwing aside his bag of specimens, he began carefully descending the steep cliff, by aid of a jutting rock or a stunted evergreen here and there.

Once his foot slipped, spraining it severely, but he went bravely on and at last lowered himself safely down to the ledge.

Then crawling on his hands and knees, he reached the side of the unconscious boy, supported only by the crooked roots of the dwarf tree on the dizzy shelf of rock.

With torn, bleeding hands David slowly but steadily raised Henry to a safe place on the ledge beside himself.

Saved. Thank God, he breathed laboriously, shuddering as he looked down into the terrible chasm below them.

But with his painful foot, he knew that it would not be wise to attempt to ascend the dangerous cliffs with the rescued boy. Then he dared not leave Harry, for fear in his unconscious condition he might roll off the ledge. There was nothing to do but wait with the hope that some one might pass that way.

But the Pine Cliffs was a wild place, seldom visited except by sightseers, and the hours dragged wearily by without bringing any one to their rescue.

The sun poured down with intense heat upon the rocky ledge. What with the pain of his swelling ankle and his great thirst, David's situation was a most trying one.

Midway in the afternoon Harry regained consciousness. After he had listened to David's brief account of how his rescue had been accomplished, he took one of his cousin's hands, torn and mangled for him on the sharp rocks, and said:

David, I'm not worth your risking so much for me, but if we get out of here alive, I'll be a kinder boy and treat you bet—

But he suddenly became insensible again.

It was near sunset that Mr. Erwin and Mr. Elliott, each searching for his missing boy, met at the top of Pine Cliffs.

Mr. Erwin was leaning over, peering down the cliffs, and as Mr. Elliott appeared, he beckoned to him to approach.

Looking down the perilous descent, he saw David, weak and pale, half-reclining on the ledge, but bravely supporting in his arms the head of his still unconscious companion.

The picture rebuked the men. It had in it so much of that tender, forgiving love, which He manifests toward the erring—that love to which they had become estranged, as they had drifted apart with the years of their silent strife.

Their eyes met, and without a word their hands joined in a warm pressure over the cliffs.

As soon as possible the boys were rescued, and taken to Mr. Erwin's house where a quiet, but none the less happy, reunion was held that night.

Harry's injuries confined him to his home for several weeks, but the daily visits of David brightened the otherwise wearisome hours. Before school again opened he had learned to emulate the patience and unselfishness of his cousin's brave, manly character.

The New York World has offered a prize of $25 for the finest baby to be entered in a contest inaugurated by that paper. Among the pictures of babies given in a Sunday issue of that paper is the baby boy, Ralph, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry K. Beachley of Hagerstown, of which the following description is given: "Age, 5 weeks; weight, 14 pounds; height, 24 inches; chest, 15 inches; biceps, 6¼ inches; thigh, 8¼ inches; calf 7¼ inches; ankle, 4½ inches." This is certainly a baby of which his parents may well be proud.

THE OPENING of the new Pennsylvania railroad bridge across the Delaware river at Philadelphia is a great and much needed enterprise and shows the progressiveness of that colossal corporation. The bridge was opened for railroad travel on Sunday. The building of this road will probably stir up the city of Philaphia so that the building of a bridge across the same river by the city will soon be consummated.

IT IS well that there are so few cases known of such utter depravity as that of Holmes, the murderer. Hardly anybody believes his statements in the so-called confession which he has recently given to the public are all true; but the fact that he could write the story which he has given to a newspaper—and for which he was doubtless well paid—and give the sickening details of his crimes, some of which, at least, he committed, shows him to be utterly depraved, and the sooner he is executed and the less that is printed about his crimes the better it will be for the general public—for all readers of newspapers and especially for the young. There will be a general feeling that justice is partially satisfied when Holmes has suffered the death penalty.

IT IS to be regretted that all the efforts that have been made by the board of trade, and are still being made by that body, have not yet had the effect of awakening our people who have idle spare capital, to the demands of our town for greater industrial activity. It is often said and with the appearances, at least, of truth that Chambersburg is the slowest town in the Cumberland Valley. There are more empty houses and more idle workmen in town this spring than in any former spring season for years. Other towns in the valley with locations less favorable, and having less money are furnishing employment to labor at prices that furnish more than a living to the working people, and the investments in those industries are yielding good returns to the investors.

It is to be hoped that the gentlemen who are trying their best to inaugurate a business revival here may succeed, but it is a matter of regret that they are receiving very little encouragement from the men who are best able to give it.

The State Convention.

The Republicans meet in state convention in Harrisburg at 11 o'clock to-day. It is wholly Quay's convention, the talk of not giving him the unanimous endorsement of the state for president was all bosh; he will be endorsed unanimously. John P. Elkin will be the next state chairman. The presidential electors-at-large will be: Joseph Wharton, Philadelphia; A. E. Patton, Clearfield; Park Painter, Philadelphia; L. D. Gilbert, Dauphin.

The delegates-at-large will be: Governor D. H. Hastings; James Elverson, Philadelphia; Frank Torrence, Allegheny; James S. Beacom, Westmoreland; F. C. Flood, Cumberland; Joseph Bosler, Montgomery; William Guest, Lancaster; F. H. Barker, Cumberland.

Hagerstown's Trolley Line.

Heretofore only about 40 men have been working regularly on the street railway lines in Hagerstown. Posters have been put up calling for 200 men at a dollar a day. There seems to be a scarcity of laboring men in that place as only 50 men could be found to go to work on Monday.

The Waynesboro Gazette thinks it would be well to extend the line to that place and sees prospects for still further extension, it says: "It was hinted in the Hagerstown exchanges that the ultimate plan of the Hagerstown trolley syndicate, which it is said is backed by the Philadelphia Traction Company, is to extend the line to Waynesboro. Nothing could be wiser from a business as well as a sentimental point of view. The line would pass through the finest belt in the Cumberland Valley, and at this end would get a local business exceeding in volume, possibly, that of Hagerstown. And then if the road should push on up the mountain and connect with all the resorts and establish electric lighting all over that famous region, oh! what a picnic it would be for the enterprise! Come on, men, and come a running. Listen—not to the mocking bird, but to our Board of Trade, who will surely see you in the premises."

A Dead Baby Dropped From a C. V. Train.

The Carlisle Herald of Tuesday says: Several railroad men found a newly born babe on the Cumberland Valley railroad tracks near White Hill about five o'clock this morning. Its appearance denoted that it had either fallen or had been thrown from a passing train.

Coroner Brindle and District Attorney Rupley were notified and went to White Hill on the morning train. A jury was impanelled and Dr. Bowman of Riverton, made an examination of the dead child. He was unable to determine whether the child had been living when born. The only witnesses heard by the Coroner and jury were the men who found the body. The infant weighed about seven pounds.

Indications seemed to show that the infant was dropped from a west-bound train leaving Harrisburg. Detective Bently went to Harrisburg to find some clue.

Conductors Martin and Reed say that they did not notice any suspicious actions on the part of any ladies in their respective trains. The whole affair resembles the New Market case very closely. It has been impossible for the jury as we go to press to learn from which train the infant was dropped.

TOWN AND TOWNSHIP.

The Events of the County as Chronicled by "Review" Correspondents—Summary of the Week's News.

MOUNT PARNELL.

Mrs. Carrie Gillan Rosenberry, wife of William Rosenberry, departed this life on Sabbath morning, April 12, after an illness of nine weeks from a complication of diseases which she bore with Christian resignation for she was a great sufferer. She was a kind wife, a sacrificing mother and an obliging neighbor. She was respected and loved by all that knew her. She was followed to her last resting place by a large concourse of friends and neighbors on Wednesday the 15th. The services were conducted by her pastor, Rev. Hughes of the U. B. church, who took for his text, Jeremiah 15:9. "Her sun is gone down while it was yet day"; from which he delivered a very touching address. She was a daughter of John W. Gillan of Mercersburg and a niece of Hon. W Rush Gillan of Chambersburg. She leaves a husband and a little son to mourn their sad loss, along with parents and brothers and sisters. This is the third death in the Gillan family within two years, and the third in the Rosenberry family—a mother, a brother and a wife in one year. Her age was 29 years, 6 months. The family have the sincere sympathy of the community in their sad bereavement.

The warm days of the past week have brought out the blossoms and improved the grain and grass in this locality. The grain does not have a good appearance here this spring; oats sowing and garden making are done; lime burning is the order of the day.

Calvin McLaughlin and Amos M. Miller are liming Hon. Wm. S. Stenger's farms this spring.

Charles King and his sister Annie, left last Saturday to make their homes with their uncle, Mr. Kane, Kennedy street, Chambersburg. Charles will work at the marble cutting with Mr. Forbes, corner Main and King streets; Annie is employed in the stocking factory. We wish them success in their undertaking.

The Mount Parnell Union Sabbath school organized on the 5th inst.: Superintendent, Amos Miller; assistant, W. A. Spidle; secretary, Mrs. Maggie Huber; treasurer, Mrs. Amos Miller; librarian, John Gelwicks. This school has been organized for five years during the summer season and has been doing a good work. We hope this work with God's blessing, may continue.

DOYLESBURG.

On Saturday while harrowing, one of Albert Heckman's horses fell dead in the field from the effects of the heat.

The Doylesburg Cornet Band gave a concert on Saturday evening at Huyett camp; they discoursed some excellent music. We claim to have the best country band in the county.

E. M. Huyett's saw mill is in full blast cutting the Ryder tract of timber. This was the finest tract in the county and is estimated to cut one million feet. They cut from eight to ten thousand feet per day and employ from 18 to 20 men and seven teams. The water used for the mill is brought 26 hundred feet in an open trough, the highest place above ground being 16 feet, crossing a sink hole. The contractors are Taylor Goshorn, Mac. Worthington and John Reed.

Sherman Ryder of near this place had a very valuable horse gored to death Monday. Mr. Ryder turned the horse loose in the barnyard where a bull was confined. The bull became enraged and at once made for the horse which was unable to get out of its way and was gored to death.

Alfred Rhine of near Dry Run, died at his home last week of rheumatism. He had been ailing for some days. He was about 40 years of age and leaves a widow and family to mourn his untimely death. Interment in Spring Run Cemetery Saturday.

George Diehl who was badly hurt about the head some time ago at Huyett's saw mill, we are pleased to say, able to go to work again.

UPPER STRASBURG.

John W. Nusbaum and W. M. Britton, two of our enthusiastic sportsmen, went trout fishing in Bear Valley on the 15th inst., and returned home with 61 fine specimens of the speckled beauties. On the 16th inst., Harry Montgomery and Tyler Reineman, of Chambersburg and C. M. Gipe of this place, also succeeded in capturing 42 trout.

H. A. Cover, of Roxbury, but who has been working in Shippensburg for quite a while, paid a short visit to friends in this place Sunday evening.—Dr. T. D. White, of this place, has gone to Philadelphia where he will attend lectures at the different colleges of which he is a graduate. He has secured Dr. Curriden of Chambersburg to take charge of his practice in this section during his absence.

The week of prayer which is now in progress in the Union church is well attended each evening by crowds of people who are eager to hear the eloquent words of the Rev. L. F. Snyder.

A welcome and much needed shower passed over this place on Monday night last, accompanied by sharp lightning and heavy peals of thunder.

Miss Ella Gabler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Solomon Gabler who resides on the McClean farm near Roxbury, died at the Eagle Hotel in this place on Friday morning after an illness of only two weeks duration. Miss Gabler attended the flitting of her brother John R. Gabler from the Rife farm to the Eagle Hotel and seemed to be in as good health as usual; but a few days after she took her bed with an attack of pneumonia followed by a complication of diseases. The afflicted family tender their warmest thanks for the assistance rendered them during the terrible trials of sickness and death, by the citizens of this community. The body was removed to the home of her parents on Friday evening and on Sunday was interred in Roxbury. It was the largest funeral ever seen in Roxbury. What makes the occasion more impressive, is the fact that her aunt, Mrs. Unverzaght, of Roxbury, who had been attending Miss Gabler during her illness, took sick and was removed to her home on Sunday and died on Thursday evening. Miss Gabler had hosts of friends in this section as well as in Roxbury. She was in her 24th year. Rev. Parris delivered a very eloquent and interesting sermon on the funeral occasion, speaking from several selections taken from the Bible.

Joseph H. James died at his home in Mifflintown on Thursday the 9th inst. At the same time his son Joseph H. James who resides in Michigan, cut his foot with an axe and bled to death. The remains of the son were brought home and interred by the side of his father. It was a sad coincidence.

THE FIRST DEFENDERS.

They Again Pass Over the Route They Took When They Responded to Lincoln's First Call for Troops.

An event of last week, full of interest to all, but especially to old soldiers, was the visit to Washington of the "First Defenders" an organization composed of the survivors of the Pennsylvania troops who were the first to respond to President Lincoln's call for volunteers in April, 1861, after Sumpter was fired on.

It is to the soldiers of Pennsylvania that the credit is given for being the first to reach to Washington to fight for the flag. For some years there was an effort to take from the soldiers of our state the credit for their prompt and patriotic action, but that attempt failed and now to them all credit is given not only by war historians, but by the act of congress itself. The companies all came from the eastern part of Central Pennsylvania. Since the war the survivors have formed themselves into an organization called the "First Defenders." This organization has been recognized by our state and national governments and congress has presented to each member a bronze medal, suitably inscribed. Some time ago the veterans formed a plan of going to Washington on the 35th anniversary of their memorable trip and this plan was carried out last week.

The veterans left Reading on Wednesday morning of last week. It was in Reading that the companies had met on April 15th, 1861. The companies which responded to Lincoln's call were the Logan Guards of Lewistown; the Ringgold Artillery of Reading; the National Light Infantry and Washington Artillerists of Pottsville, and the Allen Infantry of Allentown. When the survivors of these companies met in Reading last week there were present 134 members of the original companies. Many were accompanied by their wives and children. They were given a public reception by the Mayor and city authorities and started for Harrisburg where 35 years before they had reported to Governor Curtin. At Harrisburg they were received by Governor Hastings and other state and city officers, banqueted and entertained over night. Thursday morning they took a special train for Baltimore, arriving at Union Station at 12.15. Governor Hastings, Auditor General Gregg, Adjutant General Stewart and other officials accompanied the Pennsylvanians. They were met by Governor Lowndes of Maryland, and his staff, by the 4th Maryland Regiment, and by all the G. A. R. Posts of Baltimore. A parade was formed and the "First Defenders" and their escort marched over the identical route to Camden Street Station which they took in 1861. Notwithstanding the intense heat all of the veterans marched over every foot of the route. The reception committee had provided carriages for the wives of the visitors. They were given a magnificent reception and applauded all along the line. The Ringgold Artillery survivors carried their flag which they had borne through Baltimore in '61. It was furled and on the end of the staff was a card bearing the words "First Flag of the War." After the parade the visitors were taken to Ranie's Hall where a fine banquet was served and speeches made by Governors Hastings and Lowndes and other officials. In the evening at 6.00 o'clock they took a special train for Washington where they spent the night.

Friday morning the Pennsylvanians visited the capital where they were received by Speaker Reed and the Pennsylvania delegation in congress. Then they took up their line of march up Pennsylvania Avenue to the White House where President Cleveland received them in a very timely speech and made them feel at home. In the afternoon they paid a visit to Mount Vernon and other points of interest, returning to their homes on Saturday last. All the party bore the trip well and thoroughly enjoyed their march again over the scenes traversed in the dark days of '61.

"Porter House Steak."

The Harrisburg Call gets off the following on one of our most respected citizens:

The origin of the "Porter-house steak," which is looked upon as one of the most delicious cuts of the beef, is thus told by Col. B. L. Maurer of Chambersburg, so well known in this city:

An English sea captain, arriving in port late in the evening, went on shore for something to eat and found his way to what we call a restaurant, but what the English then called a porter-house. Being very hungry he wanted a steak cooked, but the landlord told him he had no steak. The captain insisted on having one, and the landlord told him he had no meat in the house except a small roast of beef. The captain insisted on his cutting a slice from the roast, which he did. Having broiled it he placed it before the captain. It proved so good that another was ordered and the third one before the captain was satisfied. He then told the landlord that whenever he came to the house for a meal he wanted that same kind of steak. He told his friends of the fine steak he had eaten at the porter-house, and the landlord got in the habit of sending to his butcher and had him cut off the steaks which were to be sent to the porter-house. The name "steaks for the porter-house" soon became a familiar one and the now celebrated steak is known by the name of "Porter-house."

Our Annual Gypsy Visitors.

A large band of Gypsies has been camping for some days near the Hollywell paper mill south of town. The same band has made this its annual camping ground for some years. The men are doing a little in the horse trading line and one or two of the older women endeavor every day to beguile the credulous young maidens of the town to have their fortunes told. While business in this line is not very brisk there are a few anxious, credulous ones who are willing to cross the wrinkled, dusky palms of the seeresses with silver, and then lay to heart and dream over the momentous predictions of good—always good, provided the weight of silver is great enough—that they carry with them after the interviews with the loquacious foretellers of events.

Evidently there is not so much credulity among the people as there was years ago, for Gypsy fortune telling is not nearly so paying a business as it was a score of years ago for the women of that race of people, nor is the horse-trading business so good for the men. But it is possible that there are still other localities where both sexes ply their trades with the same success they had years ago. If they manifested the same energy in making a living in other legitimate means of gaining a living what an example they would set to a number of indolent people who cannot even tell fortunes or trade horses, but would be willing to do either if they could make the business pay.

AFTER FIFTY YEARS.

Chambersburg Lodge I. O. O. F. No. 175 Celebrates Its Semi-Centennial.

Chambersburg Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, was instituted on the night of April 20, 1846. After fifty years of faithful labors under the principles of the order—after every charter member of the lodge had passed away and many others of its members also, the members of the lodge with their wives or other lady friends and a number of invited guests assembled in Housum G. A. R. Post Hall on Monday evening to celebrate the completion of its fiftieth anniversary of existence and usefulness.

Some weeks ago it was decided to observe the occasion appropriately and the matter was placed in charge of the following committee: James E. Houser, chairman; Past Grands D. J. Simmers, Thomas Durboraw, P. C. Oliver and John Martin. These gentlemen went to work energetically and by Monday evening the arrangements were all completed. At eight o'clock Presiding Officer Simmers called the assembled company to order. Miss Mary Dornberger rendered two solos on the piano; the opening ode was then sung by the members after which Chaplain E. M. Smith offered prayer. Snider's orchestra then rendered a selection, after which Chairman Simmers arose to deliver the address of welcome. Hon. Thad M. Mahon had been assigned to this duty but a letter of regret from him was read, stating that he was unavoidably detained in Washington. He sent a kindly greeting, however, and assurances of his regard for and interest in his old lodge. In the course of his address the chairman gave the names of a number of the oldest members of the lodge, who are still living. The oldest of these is Peter Feldman who was initiated June 2, 1846; he occupied a seat upon the platform. The names of others who are among the oldest, some of whom were present, are: William Robinson, initiated September 14, 1847; George Palmer, July 14, 1855; John Strike, July 12. 1859; I. N. Snively, February 19, 1861; Thad M. Mahon, August 6, 1861. A number of others of the older members were named but we have not the list. Geore W. Britsch has been treasurer of the lodge for the last 18 years. Brother Simmers made the remainder of his address as interesting as this part of it had been.

After another selection by the orchestra George W. Atherton, Esq., was introduced and spoke generally in commendation of the order, referred to its traditional antiquity and gave statistics to prove the number of members and some of the good work it is doing. Odd Fellows and their lodges are in every state and territory in the Union and in many foreign countries. There are more than a million Odd Fellows and 115,000 of the Rebekah degree. There are 982 lodges in Pennsylvania with more than 110,000 members. Over half a million dollars are paid out in benefits to the sick and to widows and orphans annually. Brother Atherton believes that Odd Fellows pay out more for the relief of the sick and destitute—members, widows and orphans, and do more good generally, than any other secular organization. The speech was instructive as to the merits of the order, was well delivered and was heard with the closest attention.

Two young ladies from Ohio, Miss Viola Gearing and Miss Cora Shafer sang a duet sweetly to the accompaniment of the autoharp.

H. H. Woodal then spoke on "The Good of the Order" and took the privilege which that topic gives in lodges, to make some rambling remarks in which he gave instances of the effective work that is done in some of the smaller and poorer lodges, of which the outside world knows nothing. Reasons why the order must be secret if its work is to be effective were given. The principles of the order—Friendship, Love and Truth—were spoken of. He concluded by announcing that the best "good of the order" to be had that evening awaited the audience in the dining room.

The closing ode was then sung after which over 200 persons repaired to the dining room and partook of the banquet that awaited them there. The menu consisted of oysters, ham, coffee, cheese, ice cream, cakes, fruits, etc., and there was an abundance for all.

The presence of so many ladies added much to the pleasure of the occasion. The committee having the matter in charge and indeed the entire lodge are to be congratulated upon the success of this semi-centennial celebration.

Will any of those there present witness the centennial anniversary of the institution of the lodge.

A DEADLY TORNADO.

Two Persons Killed—Much Property Destroyed.

A dispatch from Fremont, Ohio, Monday night says: A tornado, accompanied by a heavy rainfall, swept over the northwestern part of Sandusky county about 3 o'clock Monday afternoon, killing two persons, injuring a number of others and doing great damage to property.

The tornado came from the Southwest with great fury and every building it struck was swept away. A big tree was blown across a Wheeling and Lake Erie freight train, crushing the caboose and came near killing a number of trainmen.

The barns of Jacob Engler, J. Hefflinger, Upton Bergoon and Anthony Swintfirst went down before it. The house of James Green was destroyed. Green's aged father, Wm. L. Green, was killed outright, his wife fatally hurt and the baby carried across the road in its cradle. The child escaped uninjured.

Next the barn of Amos Hetrick, in which Hetrick and John Low were shearing sheep, was crushed. Low was blown across a field against a tree, being instantly killed. Other buildings destroyed were the barns of A. Fairchild, Wm. Hensel, Perry Parish, George Waggoner and Charles Tucker. Tucker's child was badly hurt.

At Booktown, a hamlet near there, nearly all the buildings were destroyed, bnt there was no loss of life.

Chicago Fair Diplomas Ready.

The long-expected distribution of Columbian World's Fair diplomas and medals has begun at last, and Monday about 3,000 diplomas and medals covering all of the successful German exhibitors at the fair were turned over to Baron Thielmann, the German ambassador, who will ship them immediately to his government for distribution. Those awarded to American exhibitors will be ready for delivery within the next ten days or two weeks at the farthest, and the shipments to England, France, Russia, Spain, Italy and other foreign countries will be ready for delivery to their respective diplomatic representatives in Washington within the next month.

A SUDDEN DEATH FROM ALCOHOL.

An Excellent Mechanic Dies From Drink In Orrstown.

Coroner Suesserott was notified on Monday that John A. Gebler of Lurgan township had died about 8 o'clock that morning at Minter's hotel in Orrstown under circumstances which, it was thought should be investigated by that officer.

The coroner at once responded and upon his arrival in Orrstown consulted with Dr. Leberknight, and it was decided that an autopsy should be held.

The man had lain in a wagon in John A. Zullinger's wagon shed over Saturday night and on Sunday morning when it was discovered that he was very ill he was taken to a room in the hotel and placed in bed where he remained until he died.

From the time he was discovered in the shed the man had received the most careful attention from Dr. Leberknight, and after he was removed to the hotel Mr. and Mrs. Minters both were assiduous in their attention to him. Coroner Suesserott impanneled the following jury before whom evidence was taken: Saml. Knisely, foreman; W. B. Smith, John A. Zullinger, Jacob Bergner, F. P. Stewart and H. B. Spencer. The testimony before the inquest developed the following facts, a number of witnesses having been called: Gabler went to Minter's hotel Friday for dinner; while at the hotel he drank three or four bottles of beer. The man went away afterward and didn't return till Saturday morning when he drank, from 8 to 11 o'clock, four drinks of whisky. Late in the afternoon Minter saw him in Zullinger's shed and sent for the doctor. From the time he was taken to the hotel he was unconscious until he died. The testimony of all the witnesses agreed substantially.

His wife and four children had been sent for to their home a mile north of Orrstown and were with him when he died as were also a number of other friends.

Gabler was a plasterer by trade and had worked with B. F. Johns of this place and was a good mechanic, and a pleasant, kindly man. He was addicted to drink, however, and it was evidently overindulgence in liquor that caused his death. Of bis four children three are boys and the youngest is only two years old.

The verdict of the coroner's jury was that Gabler died from apoplexy superinduced by excessive alcoholism. After the coroner's inquest was finished the dead man was taken to his sorrowing family at their home, from which the funeral took place yesterday at 10 a. m. The burial took place in the Bethel graveyard in Orrstown.

Howard To Lecture For the Encampment.

General O. O. Howard, one of the very few Major Generals of the late war has been secured to lecture on Tuesday evening of encampment week in Rosedale opera house. General Howard is one of the bravest officers who served in the late war. He always held important commands and his bravery and loyalty were of the highest type. At Fair Oaks in the Peninsular campaign in 1882 he received two wounds in his right arm rendering amputation necessary. Before his wound was fully healed he had returned to his command, and remained in the service at the front until the close of the war. He was an active participant in many of the battles of the war and since then he has told the story of his personal participation in these conflicts, their incidents, their results and the causes of the same, to thousands of willing and attentive audiences. The committee is to be congratulated in having secured the services of an officer so brave and who knows so well whereof he speaks. His subject will be "The Battle of Gettysburg."

The Medical Society Meeting.

The meeting of the Franklin County Medical Society on Tuesday was one of the most interesting to the members present that have been held in many months. Dr. H. G. Chritzman of Welsh Run read a paper that was listened to with the closest attention. Dr. Joseph Price of Philadelphia, a noted specialist in abdominal surgery also addressed the society at some length. He afterwards won the admiration of the members by performing a very difficult operation in his line upon a patient in the hospital, South Main street.

A WORD IN PASSING.

Town and County Briefs With a Bit of Comment—Happenings of the Week and a Forecast of Coming Events.

Petitions are being circulated in town asking the Postmaster General to discontinue the Sunday mail service that has recently been inaugurated here.

Gustav H. Elter, of Chambersburg and Mrs. Miriam Kuhn, of Fort Loudon were married Wednesday, April 15, by Rev. Herman F. Kroh, at the Second Lutheran parsonage.

The subscription lists for the Board Trade fund are at the business place of N. E. Shade, the hatter, on the Public Square, where they can be seen by any persons interested, and especially by those who wish to subscribe.

Greenawalt & Zullinger will have a car load of 23 fine western horses for sale at the National Hotel stables tomorrow to sell at retail. Fourteen are beautiful grays. All are specially fine workers and drivers. Call and see them.

An exchange tells us that Dr. George E. Stewart of Dry Run, will erect in that place this summer a large steam roller flour mill. The doctor is a man of much business energy and when he decides upon an enterprise he usually carries it through.

York and Cumberland county Democrats held a meeting at Bridgeport on Saturday to discuss the question of changing the party rules to do away with the rotation system of nominating a congressman in the Nineteenth district. No conclusion was reached.

Miss Elizabeth Bohlayer, a student at Wilson College, died at her home in Troy, Pa., on Saturday, after a short illness. Miss Bohlayer, with her twin sister, has been a student at Wilson since last fall. She left the college in the best of health and went home to enjoy her Easter vacation.

The C. V. R. R. company has begun the erection of its new office building in Harrisburg at Fourth and Chestnut streets. The structure will be handsome and commodious and well suited to the wants of the road, at its Harrisburg terminus. It will be pushed vigorously forward to completion.

Borough council has taken such official action as will prevent the placing or leaving upon any boroughway—street or alley—any glass, crockery or other waste that will injure the feet of barefoot children, rubber tires on bicycles or the feet of animals. A fine will follow the violation of this ordinance or regulation.

It is said that the peach crop will be a complete failure in the lowlands where it was reached by the frost. A grower of much experience says that the high land facing the afternoon sun is much the best for peach raising, owing to it not getting the frost nor the morning sun which pushes the buds too fast to maturity.

The next international convention of the Christian Endeavor societies will meet in Washington, D. C., in July next from the 8th to the 13th of the month. Special hotel rates and accommodations are already being arranged for delegates. J. W. Teats of York, Pa., who is a nephew of Dr. Devilbiss of this place, has the matter of rates in charge.

Dr. J. Newton Alexander, son of Dr. R. Mc. Alexander of Fannettsburg, has tendered his resignation as resident physician at the Altoona hospital to take effect May 1. He will locate for practice in Perth Amboy, New Jersey. Dr. Alexander is regarded as one of the bright young practitioners in the state, and there is no doubt as to his success wherever he may locate.

There was a full meeting of the Soldiers' Orphans' Industrial Commission at Scotland on Tuesday. So far as we can learn only ordinary routine business was attended to. The matter of grading and otherwise beautifying the grounds required consideration. From the indications of present progress the surroundings of the school will be beautiful, indeed, when the work is entirely completed.

Commissions for the following named Justices of the Peace were ready for delivery at the Register's office Monday; Van T. Haulman, second ward, Chambersburg; George H. Wood, third ward, Chambersburg; L. M. Hollinger, Montgomery township; John F. Gelwicks, St. Thomas township; W. W. Elder, Letterkenny township; W. B. Smith, Orrstown; H. S. Myers, Fayetteville; F. A. Daihl, Greene township.

The eighteen-year-old son of H. Z. Wingerd ran away from home on Tuesday. He had been employed to gather milk for the creamery at Pleasant Hall. After delivering his cans he drove to Orrstown where he left his team and handed over his employers' money to John A. Zullinger. He left in the direction of Mongul where he said he was going, but as he has not been heard from it is thought he has gone west. His home is in Letterkenny.

Some days ago William Guessford and David Marshall sawed their way out of Hagerstown jail but were captured soon after on the streets. Joseph P. Sheehan has been held for court on the charge of aiding them to escape. It is said he passed to them a plug of tobacco which contained the saw with which they cut the bar of their window. The arrest of Sheehan was made on the testimony of Guessford as to furnishing the saw.

The Hagerstown Morning Herald says: As the 9:02 train for Harrisburg was about to depart at the Cumberland Valley railroad Wednesday night of last week, Godfrey Goetz, of Greencastle, desiring to return to that place, happened to board the Norfolk and Western train by mistake. He was told of his error and of the necessity of hurrying to get the right train. He got off backwards and fell making a narrow escape from being run over A. R. Miller, of this city, assisted him out of harm's way.

The entertainment at Scotland on Saturday evening, which was given for the purpose of raising funds to purchase flags for the schoolhouses in Greene township was a decided success. The house was crowded and the entertainment was pleasing to all present. There were tableaux, recitations, dialogues, songs and other music and several addresses. One of the pathetic features of the evening was the roll call of Company B, 21st Penna Cavalry. Of the long list of names called a large majority long since answered their final roll call, and only a very few were present to respond when their names were called. From the vim with which the surviving veterans took part in the entertainment it is clear that they have not yet lost their youthful spirit.

There is considerable talk of a carnival during G. A. R. week in June. It will be a spectacular night parade and the proposition is to have it the evening of the last day of the encampment. It would be an appropriate occasion to have the tableaux represent scenes of the late war, some of the most interesting of which might be of a local character when it is considered that Chambersburg had a tragic part in that great struggle.

Speaking about snow in April, many can remember the spring of fifteen years ago, in '81. There was good sleighing up to April 7, prior to which the country roads were almost impassable on account of snow drifts. The writer remembers that in 1854 on the 17th day of April, Thomas W. McAllen who then had charge of the old McAllen mansion farm at Fannettsburg had several sleds hauling out manure. In the morning the snow was quite deep, but the warm sun which came out during the day melted most of it so that by evening it was running in rivulets in the roads and by next morning it was nearly all gone.

The Shippensburg News gives its views on Republican politics in Franklin county as follows: "The Republican newspapers of Franklin county have considerable difficulty in reconciling themselves, as to who is the "boss" of the party at the present time. It looks a little like "sour grapes" on the party, or faction, who failed to nominate their friends, when they call the winners "ringsters." This is a favorite expression of the "outs" to use against the "ins." One set of men has as much right to dominate in a party as another, and for the defeated ones to charge the other with being "ringsters" is unjust, and the sooner they change their minds the better it will be for themselves, and the party with which they affiliate."

Monday's Herald thus tells how ice is made at one of the large factories in Hagerstown. "A large tank is filled with distilled water, the sides of which are metal, through which coils filled with ammonia circulate. This extracts the heat from the water, the circulation being kept up by a large engine located not over ten feet from the tanks. When the ice formed against the side of the tank attains a thickness of twelve or fourteen inches, it is lifted out by means of power from the engine. Two long rods with eyelets at the top are frozen in the cake of ice and by means of hooks the large block, weighing four tons is raised slowly out of the tank and is taken by means of an over-head carriage to a platform upon which it is laid. Here it is cut into pieces by a knife, the blades of which are hollow, by hot steam being forced through them melting its way through the block. The ice is as clear as crystal and there never has been such demand for it during the month of April as sprung up last week."

Judge Stewart Memorial Day Orator.

Hon. John Stewart has consented to deliver the oration on Memorial Day. The exercises will be held in the court house. It will be gratifying to every old soldier to know that Judge Stewart has consented to be the orator on this occasion. Having served as a soldier himself and being in cordial sympathy with the survivors of the war for the Union, no man is more concerned in perpetuating and honoring the memory of those who fell during the war or have fallen since then, than Judge Stewart. No better selection could have been made.

The Hotels Are Leased.

As a result of the retrenchment schemes of the joint receivership of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, the corporation will dispose of the big railway hotels which have been identified with the road. The Queen City hotel at Cumberland, Md., will be leased. The hotel at Grafton, W. Va., has already been leased and the Deer Park hotel has been opened under other auspices. At Oakland, Md., the hotel is closed and the famous Relay House, just outside of Baltimore, has also been disposed of to lessees. At an early date a Royal Blue line train will be run on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad between Pittsburg and Cincinnati.

Excited Republicans in Bedford.

After an unusually stormy convention last week the Bedford county Republicans nominated the following ticket: Legislature, William C. Smith and S. Marshall Williams, both of Everett; District Attorney, Alvin L. Little; Prothonotary, James Cleaver; Treasurer, Chas. Reily; Register and Recorder, Ed. S. Horne; Sheriff, Andrew Dodson. Upon representation of fraudulent voting in Broad Top township, the decision between Hicks and Thropp for Congress has been left to the court, which convened on Monday. Though we have not heard the decision of the court, from what we gather of the proceedings the decision will evidently be in favor of Hicks. There is much hostility toward Thropp.

A Dangerous Runaway.

J. Thomas Allen of the wholesale grocery firm of Wolfinger, Allen and Brown was out in the northern section of the county on Friday on business for the firm, accompanied by Frank Souders. They hired a double team at Shippensburg and started to visit the merchants in the villages westward from Shippensburg. While going down a steep hill to the creek at Mongul the pole broke and the team ran away throwing the occupants both out. Mr. Allen was severely hurt and is still suffering severely from injuries about the chest and upper part of the body. Mr. Souders was only slightly hurt. When the team reached the bridge at the creek one of the horses jumped over the wall and broke its back. The injured men came home on the W. M. R. R. train.

Resolutions.

The following resolutions were passed by the Roxbury Christian Endeavor Society on the death of Miss Ella M. Gabler.

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God in His wisdom to remove from our society Miss Ella M. Gabler, one of our most worthy and esteemed active members and workers, we deem it fitting, that we record our appreciation of her many excellent qualities; therefore,

Resolved, That the wisdom and ability which she has exercised in the aid of our society by service, contributions and counsel, will ever be held in grateful remembrance.

Resolved, That the removal of such a life from our midst leaves a vacancy and shadow that will be long felt by all the members and friends of our society.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the bereaved family and friends of the deceased, and hope that even so great a loss may be overruled for good by Him who doeth all things well.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family and a copy placed on the records of the society, also a copy be sent to THE FRANLIN REVIEW for publication.

PERSONAL PARAGRAPHS.

Items of Interest About You and Our Friends and Those Whom We All know.

Dr. E. G. Jones, Dry Run, was a business visitor in town over Tuesday night.

Mrs. D. B. Nace and her sister, Miss Sue Wampler, are visiting friends in Greencastle.

W. H. Nelson of the Fulton county bank and J. Nelson Sipes, Esq., of McConnellsburg, were business visitors to Chambersburg Tuesday.

John C. Montgomery and A. Harry Zullinger of this place graduated from the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy on Wednesday of last week.

Geo. H. Stewart and family have been spending a few days in Washington, D. C. Mrs. Stewart had previously been spending some time at Old Point Comfort.

Mrs. Mc. Stinger, after spending the winter in Fannettsburg, left on Friday to join her husband in Chicago, where he has been employed for some years. Mrs. Stinger's health has not been at all robust.

Miss Emily Wilson, of Metal, has been spending the winter with her sister, Mrs. Wyand, at Keedysville, Md. Miss Wilson is now the guest of Dr. Devilbiss' family. She will spend the summer at her home.

S. H. Snyder, of Markes, accompanied by his wife and little boy, spent Sunday in town with friends. They were pleasant callers at the REVIEW office Monday morning. They like the REVIEW, in evidence of which fact the subscription is settled for a year.

J. D. Reasner of the sawmill firm of Reasner and Baughman, was in town on business Saturday. He says they have moved their sawmill from Smoketown to the Shively timber tract and are now ready to saw any kind of oak or other hard wood lumber that may be called for.

J. B. Alexander, farmer, merchant, stock dealer and postmaster at Willow Hill, returned from Philadelphia Monday evening, having been down with a lot of cattle and hogs. Mr. Alexander says the cattle markets are not at all encouraging. He made a very pleasant business call at the REVIEW office Tuesday morning.

Among those who settled their subscription on Saturday was J. Mac Flickinger of near Willow Hill. Besides managing his excellent farm, Mr. Flickinger is industriously engaged in raising poultry for the eastern markets. He is now getting ready to market several thousand ducks, besides chickens, squabs and other good eating that epicures most enjoy.

C. M. Dixon, Fulton county's delegate to the state convention and M. R. Shaffner, Esq., another of Fulton's prominent Republicans, paid the REVIEW office a very pleasant and friendly call Wednesday on their way to the convention. It was a great pleasure to meet these friends, one of whom was a pupil of the writer and both are warm personal friends.

Among the welcome business callers at the REVIEW office Tuesday morning were Dr. Hudson of Mercersburg and Dr. Devor of Fort Loudon, who were in town to attend the meeting of the medical society. Dr. Devor informs us that Abijah Ford who was so terribly injured ten days ago, seems to be in quite a hopeful condition. The fracture in his skull was over four inches long.

David W. Jones of Metal, was among the business visitors to town Monday. He also paid his respects to the REVIEW office in a substantial way. Mr. Jones was one of those boys who enlisted in 1862 as "Easton's avengers." He served in the 126th regiment and was captured at Chancellorsville and was a prisoner in Libby and on Belle Island. He afterwards enlisted in the 21st Penna. Cavalry and was in the final round-up at Appomattox.

"Uncle" Jacob Brumbaugh, of Lehmaster, was a most welcome caller yesterday. He was thrice welcome, indeed, for he not only advanced his own subscription but gave us the names of two other subscribers, Mrs. Annie McCullough, of Williamson and Mrs. Jane Newman, of State Line, and he advanced their subscriptions to May 1897. There is no discount on such friendship as that of "Uncle" Jacob. He had a little eye surgery performed while in town and we hope he may be greatly benefited thereby.

Several Accidents Reported From Hagerstown.

We find the following paragraphs in the Hagerstown Globe of Monday:

During the storm that passed over Washington county on Saturday, but which was more violent along the Potomac river than elsewhere, thunder and lightning played a prominent part. Martin Castle and a young son, residing near the Pulp Mills, at Dam No. 5, a prominent and respected citizen, were doing some hauling and were overtaken while on the road with a two-horse team. The son was seated on the saddle horse and the father was riding on the wagon. A flash of lightning struck the team. Both horses fell dead, but the son escaped unhurt. The father, however, was stunned by the shock. It was first thought that he was dead. A physician was summoned and Mr. Castle taken to his home by sympathetic neighbors who were notified and quickly responded. The last report was that he was critically ill and there were but slight hopes of his recovery.

W. Scott Corbett, a hay dealer, whose home is in the neighborhood of Clear Spring, was severely cut about the head and face while attempting to board the 4.20 Cumberland Valley passenger train Saturday evening. He was at the C. V. freight office and wanted to go to Maugansville to get a bill of lading. Not having time to get down to the passenger station he attempted to get on the moving train at Church street. The motion of the train turned him around and threw him heavily on the ground. He was cut and bruised by the fall.

A serious accident occurred on the farm of Geo. C. Huffer, a prominent farmer, near Middletown, Frederick county, on Saturday, by which Chas. T. K. Young, son of Daniel Young, lost half of his right arm. Workmen were engaged in sawing shingles by steam, and Mr. Young was running the jointer. In reaching under the circular saw to push away some pieces of shingle, his right arm came in contact with the saw, and it ripped through the arm, diagonally back of the wrist. Dr. E. L. Beckley, Dr. J. E. Beatty and Mr. Grayson Gaver amputated the arm about two inches below the elbow. He stood the shock of amputation remarkably well, and is getting along nicely. He is a member of Middletown Council, Jr. O. U. A. M., is unmarried and about twenty-seven years old.

DEATH'S DOINGS.

Those Who Have Passed to the Great Beyond—The Death Record In Franklin County and Elsewhere.

Miss Daisy Seylar, daughter of John Seylar, Jun., died at her home at Markes Thursday evening, aged 17 years. She had been an invalid for some months. There is much sympathy with the family in their bereavement. Miss Daisy was a bright young lady of much promise, and it is sad that she should be cut down just as she was entering into useful womanhood.

Eli McCullough, the well-known stock dealer, died quite unexpectedly at his home near Lehmaster on Thursday, of heart trouble, after a brief illness. His funeral took place on Saturday; interment in the cemetery at Mercersburg. He leaves a widow and seven children. Mr. McCullough was one of the most widely known men in the county and had hosts of friends. He was one of the kindliest-hearted of men and the news of his death will be read with regret by very many. The widow and children have much sympathy in their bereavement. His age was past 61 years. If the world had more men in it like Eli McCullough there would be far less suffering in it. He was a consistent member of the Presbyterian church.

Alfred A. Matthews, a former resident of Chambersburg, died at Lafayette, Indiana. His parents resided at Shippensburg. For years he was a salesman and afterward was freight agent for the Cumberland Valley and the Western Maryland railroads in succession. His widow, one son and two daughters reside in Chambersburg. He is survived also by four brothers and one sister. His age was 62 years.

Maggie, wife of Grant Simmers, died at her home on North Second street Thursday afternoon after only a short illness, leaving her husband and two sons, both small. She was in her 34th year. She was a member of Corpus Christi Catholic church. The funeral took place Saturday.

Mrs. Eliza Carpenter died at her home in Greencastle on the 11th inst., in her 64th year. Three days before her death her husband was buried in Cedar Hill cemetery. His death was so great a shock to her, that, being ill at the time, she sank gradually till she died. She was an estimable christian woman.

Mrs. Ella A. Zug, wife of J. M. Zug, died on Sunday at noon at her home in Woodstock on the Mont Alto R. R., of neuralgia of the heart, with which she had been suffering for months. The funeral took place Tuesday; interment at Womelsdorf, Berks county, which was her former home.

Mrs. Elizabeth Swartz, aged 78 years, died Sunday morning at the home of her sister Mrs. Gsell, East Market street. The funeral took place Tuesday; burial in the Mennonite graveyard north of town.

Mrs. Catherine C. Weidler, mother of Rev. J. B. Weidler, Waynesboro; W. O. Weidler, Carlisle, and Mrs. Addie Yoe, Shippensburg, died Friday last at Shippensburg, aged 88 years. The funeral took place Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. The interment was made in Spring Hill cemetery, Shippensburg.

Mrs. Elizabeth Shinabrough died at the hospital Tuesday evening at 9.30 p. m., after a long and painful illness. She had been taken to the hospital for surgical treatment and though the operations were successfully performed she was too weak to rally from them. She was 40 years old. She leaves her husband, Engineer James Shinabrough of the C. V. R. R., one son and two sisters. She was a member of the First Lutheran church and was in every respect an exemplary christian woman. Funeral tomorrow—Friday—at 2 p. m. Interment in Cedar Grove cemetery.

Work of Council

There was an adjourned meeting of council on Tuesday evening at which much business was transacted. One of the important items was the decision to purchase four Parrot field guns and carriages for the Memorial Fountain enclosure to take the place of the four guns now in the enclosure which are not intended for carriages. The new guns are to be in place before the encampment is held in June. Council has presented Housum Post, G. A. R., with the guns now at the fountain. They will be placed on the Post grounds in a few days.

Permission had been asked by several persons to run a sewer through North Main and King streets to the creek. D. K. Appenzellar appeared before council and protested against granting the privilege whereupon the following resolution was adopted:

That council has learned that the purpose of the drain from the public house of E. L. Wesley and others is not solely for the purpose of draining surplus water, as stated in the petition of E. L. Wesley and others, but for the purpose of draining private and public water closets also; therefore council emphatically refuses to allow any such use of said drain and if this is the object of said drain the permission to lay said drain is refused.

The Circus is Coming.

Returning Spring brings no more attractive feature than the annual visit of the circus. The familiar smell of the saw dust, the sight of the time-honored ring, the glitter of spangles and uniforms, and the blare of the brass band act like a tonic upon the amusement seeker weary with theatricals and disgusted with farce. The circus is the place to renew one's lost youth, with its illusions, its easily gratified tastes and eagerness to be pleased. You will go this year and next just the same, and enjoy it with the same heartiness. Hunting's New Rail Road Shows will exhibit in Chambersburg on April 29. This year Mr. Hunting has reduced the price of admission to his excellent show to the unprecedented prices of 10 and 20 cents. Adults 20 cents; Children under twelve 10 cents, reserved seats 10 cents extra.

Improvements At Mercersburg College.

The Board of Regents of Mercersburg College met in Chambersburg on Thursday afternoon, Hon. W. Rush Gillan, presiding. Plans and specifications of the new building to be erected on the college grounds were submitted by the building committee. According to report of the finance committee the necessary funds are assured, so the contract will be let soon so that the building may be completed before winter. The building will be of brick 45x65 feet, three stories high. The ground floor will contain the chapel and recitation rooms; the second and third floors will be occupied with dormitories.

Another building of two stories is also contemplated. There will be a large iron tank on top to furnish water for lavatories, toilet and bath rooms which will occupy the building.

LIGHTNING STRIKES
TWICE IN THE SAME PLACE.

Again we have been visited by a disastrous FIRE, this time doing us more than double the damage it did a few months ago. Not only were we damaged to a much larger extent but all our

IMMENSE NEW STOCK OF DRY GOODS
Dress Goods and Notions

for the Spring trade were opened only a few days before the fire occurred.

What follows this fearful loss? That our stock must be closed out in less than half the time it was before. Our goods are still wet and what were left dry at the time of the fire the recent rains have damaged to some extent. We now have a temporary roof over the store and we will be ready for the waiting multitudes that are crowding our doors for admittance,

Experience costs money but it teaches us the value of having more help at "Fire sales," and this time you may crowd us all you will for we will be prepared with a score of willing salesmen.

The bargains we gave you before are still fresh in your memory, but my friends, it only gave you a small idea of the sacrifice we are compelled to make this time.

Our time for selling is shorter and our stock not only larger but newer and more attractive goods were crowded in our store this time than ever in the history of our business. Goods that were sold at half price before, this time will be almost given away to make them go quickly, knowing as we do that the longer they are on our shelves the worse they may get.

If they are bought quickly and dried at home they will be good as ever. We have neither time nor room for drying them.

The most wonderful and greatest sacrifice known to modern merchandising will commence in our store Saturday, April 4, and continue until every piece of goods in the store is sold.

Don't wait; come early, and remember that at our former fire sale hundreds were disappointed because they waited too long and the goods were all sold.

Yours truly,

CHURCH AND SUNDAY SCHOOL.

The Lesson For Sunday, April 26.

International Sunday school lesson for Sunday, April 26, 1896, from Luke 16: 19-31. Title: The Rich Man and Lazarus. Golden text: "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." In the last lesson and in the other portions of the chapter containing that lesson our Lord taught how God loves His lost children, and what rejoicing there is among the angels in heaven over the return to the fold of one who has strayed away. This lesson emphasizes the love of God to the poor and despised children of earth.

All who read the present lesson thoughtfully will have their sympathies awakened for the despised beggar covered with sores who sat at the rich man's gate, with only dogs for sympathetic companions. There will be little regard for the man who lived in a palace, was richly clothed and sumptuously fed every day. Yet it will not do to conclude that the accumulation of riches by industry, frugality and wisdom, is in itself a sin. Much of the best charitable work in the world is accomplished through the accumulations of rich men, in proper and honorable ways. Hospitals are built, homes for the aged and destitute, colleges are endowed, scholarships issued, large sums of money are given by rich men every year to worthy charities and benevolences,—in fact much good is done by wealthy men that could not be done if there were no men of large means in the country. These are notable and noble instances of the value of the right use of money. But there is danger in the accumulation of riches. It becomes so absorbing as to close the heart against all the finer emotions and impulses that exalt human nature.

We read that "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven." The golden text says: "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Elsewhere we read: "Where the treasure is there will the heart be also."

Nor are we to infer that all beggars enter the kingdom of God simply because they are beggars. Many have brought themselves to want by their vicious manner of living, and are still unrepentant; they reject the pity that Lazarus inspired; they only bemoan and regret their evil fortune and harden their hearts against the rich and against all mankind, indeed, because of their own undesirable condition. It is a fact, however, that nothing else teaches humility so impressively as poverty and nothing tends more to create pride than riches, and upon these facts the parable seems to have been founded. The rich man fared sumptuously, richly, every day; the poor man scrambled with the dogs for crums of bread, to help him eke out a miserable existence. The former was of courtly, commanding appearance, probably, while the latter was a repulsive sight because of his poverty and sores, and he was passed by hurriedly and with scant notice, while no doubt the rich man was courted, flattered and made much of.

Such were their conditions in this life. But the beggar died, and then his condition was changed, he was borne by angels, God's messengers of love, to Abraham's bosom; he was given into the care of the "Father of the faithful." There were hardly any imposing, solemn funeral services over the putrid body of the beggar whom all despised and only God loved. Doubtless his body was hurried to the potter's field and hurriedly covered, without a tear or a sigh, and the only feeling caused by his death was one of gratification that he was out of the way. The rich man no doubt had an imposing burial; the hired mourners went about the place lamenting the death of one of the most prominent people. Many friends with solemn faces bent over the bier. No doubt the body was embalmed in sweet spices and precious, costly ointments; it was probably wrapped in the finest of linen and laid in a beautiful tomb, and the mourners for a time went about the streets. He was done with earth, his record was made, and he went to his place.

From that time the conditions of the two—Lazarus and the rich man are still in contrast but the contrast is changed. The poor man is comforted but the rich man is tormented. The consciousness of each remained after death. Though there was a "great gulf fixed" between them so that neither one could go to the other, each knew the estate of the other. Abraham heard the cry of the man in torment and answered, but did not relieve him. The rich man had become the beggar for even a cup of water to cool his parched tongue. But it could not be, there could be no passing to and fro; the time for kindly ministrations had gone; the condition of each was permanently fixed. Abraham does not taunt him on account of his vain and useless petition, but addresses him kindly. "Thou in thy lifetime receivedst thy good things and Lazarus his evil things". The rich man had the things his heart had desired. He had exchanged his birthright for a mess of pottage. The account was finally settled and closed according to the way he had made it.

Then he would have Lazarus go to his five brothers who were still living but Abraham told him very plainly how useless the sending of such a message would be. If they would not hear Moses and the prophets they would not hear one from the dead, even if it were their own brother. Christ the Son of God suffered all things and still pleads with men yet they reject Him.

The lesson teaches many things: The danger of riches, what hell or hades is, consciousness after death, a second probation altogether improbable. The entire lesson deserves careful study and should be wisely applied.

No Apology Needed

In addition to giving the convicted man a term of ten years in prison, the judge imposed on him the gratuitous punishment of listening to a long speech made for the benefit of the reporters, in which he set forth specifically the reasons for his action. "You needn't have done all that apologizin' fer imposin' on a feller man," said the culprit kindly. "They ain't no hard feelings on my part. I know as well as you do that a man can't hold the job of judge and act the gentleman at the same time."—Indianapolis Journal.

Striking the Key-Note

BY MARY HUBBARD HOWELL.

Tinkle, tinkle, jingle, jingle, clattered the keys of the piano, and then slam, slam! bang, bang! they went, as if a dozen little music-scholars were taking their first lesson together.

Mrs Ogden left her work in the sewing-room and hurried into the parlor. Nell's fingers were still pounding like little hammers on the ivory keys of the piano.

"Nell, what are you doing? Do you call such discords music?" her mother asked sternly.

"Why, no; of course not, mother. But when I began to practice, my little cameo pin rang out just as if I had struck it, and I've been trying to make it ring again."

"You struck its key-note, I suppose, my dear."

"Its key-note?" Nell repeated.

"Yes. They say that everything has a key-note, Nell, and years ago I saw Professor Tyndal give a beautiful experiment to prove that theory. He had several little bells placed before him on a table, and when, with a little wand, he struck one, all the others rang too."

"What made them, mother?"

"They were all keyed to the same note," Mrs Ogden explained.

Nell looked thoughtful.

"Have we a key-note, mother?"

"Yes, Nell. Watch yourself and your schoolmates to-day, and I think you will learn that there is a note in all our hearts that rings out sweetly whenever it is struck."

It was almost nine o'clock, and, with a puzzled little face, Nell closed the piano, found her books, and started for school.

"O Nell!" cried one of her young friends, as they met at the door of the schoolhouse, "Lois Bigelow's coming to school to-day. I am real sorry,—aren't you?"

"Yes," Nell said with emphasis, "I am sorry. Lois Bigelow is as proud as if she were the empress of India. She never acts as if she cared for any one, or wanted any one to care for her. I can't help it, if it is wrong. I do just hate such selfish people."

"So do I, Nell. Lois snubbed me the other day, and now I guess it is my turn to snub her."

"I heard father say once that snubs are like uncalled for letters, —they are generally returned to us," Nell said with a proud little toss of her head.

Just then the bell rang, and the girls hastened into the schoolroom, Lois Bigelow was already there. She was a sad, reserved looking girl. She sat at a desk by herself, and did not notice any of her schoolmates.

"She has no eyes for any one but herself," one of the girls said scornfully at recess. "I think she's detestable. Don't you, Nell Ogden?"

"Yes," Nell answered, "I feel as if there were an iceberg in the schoolroom. I believe I'm beginning already to freeze." And the young girl laughed, and pretended to shiver.

"She's nothing to be proud of," chimed in another girl. "Her father was a bank president, and he—embezzled, I believe they call it, and had to run away to escape going to prison, and now no one knows where he is. I don't think that a very good reason for carrying your head high, and not noticing other people, —do you, Nell?"

Nell Odgen was silent. In her beautiful young life there had never been a sorrow, or even a shadow of one, but she had a deep and sympathetic nature, and now she seemed suddenly to understand Lois Bigelow, "She feels disgrace because of her father's sin," she thought, "and she shuns us because she thinks we would not care to know her. Why, I should feel just as she does, if I were in her place."

Nell's face grew bright with a beautiful resolve. She went to her desk, and took out a box of candy.

"Oh, give me some!" cried two or three of the girls. But Nell only smiled, and, passing them, went up to Lois Bigelow.

"Won't you have some?" she asked, offering her the box. And then, as Lois looked at her with sad and sorrowful eyes, she said tremulously,—for it was always hard for Nell to make the first advance to any one,—"I want to welcome you to our school. I want you to let me be your friend,—will you?"

Lois Bigelow's eyes were filled with tears, and her voice was choked with sobs, as she whispered:

"Oh, if you will be my friend, I shall be so glad! I am so lonely. You don't know how hard it is to feel that no one loves you."

"I will love you, and so will all the girls if you will let them," Nell promised.

And Lois looked up and smiled,—the first glad smile Nell had ever seen on her face.

"Mother," Nell said that evening, after she had related her little experience, "I believe I struck the key-note of Lois Bigelow's heart to-day, —didn't I?"

Mrs Ogden smiled tenderly.

"I think you did, Nell," she answered. "And I want you to remember always, dear, that our hearts are all alike, and they will answer to the touch of love when nothing else can move them."—Sunday School Times.

A Close Call for Sheridan.

One of the bravest soldiers who was in the thick of it at Appomatox is General John B. Gordon. He led the Confederates who attempted to burst through Sheridan's column to get away. Among his thrilling stories of the "Last Days" is the following personal incident. After telling how the effort to drive Sheridan only separated his own command into weak fragments the general says: "I saw plainly that the Federals would soon rush between us, and there would have been no army. I called on Colonel Peyton to carry a flag of truce forward. He answered, 'General, I have no flag of truce.'

"Then I said, 'Put your handkerchief on a stick and go forward.'

"'I have no handkerchief, general.'

"'Then borrow one and go forward with it.

'He tried and reported to me that there was no handkerchief in my staff.

"'Then use your shirt.'

"'You see, general, we all have on flannel shirts.'

"At last we found a man who had a white shirt. I tore out the back, and, rigged it to a stick, Col, Peyton went forward to the enemy's lines. I told him to say to General Sheridan, that General Lee had written me that a flag of truce had been sent from his and Grant's headquarters, and that he (Sheridan) could act as he thought best on the information. In a few minutes Colonel Peyton came back with a representative of Sheridan, who said, 'General Sheridan demands the unconditional surrender of your army.'

"'Please return with my compliments to General Sheridan, and say that I will not surrender

"'But, general, he will annihilate you.'

"'I am well aware of my situation.'

'He went back to his lines, and in a short time General Sheridan came forward, attended by a very large staff. As the general drew near I noticed one of my sharpshooters drawing his rifle down upon him. I at once called out: 'Put down your gun. This is a flag of truce.' But he simply settled it to his shoulders and was drawing a bead on Sheridan, when I leaned forward and siezed hold of his piece. He struggled with me, but I finally raised it. I loosed it, and he started to aim again. I caught it again, when he raised his stern, white face, all broken with grief and streaming with tears, up to mine and said, 'Well, general, then let him keep on his own side."

Laura Jean Libbey's Story in the New York Ledger.

Laura Jean Libbey, the most popular writer of stories for women of the present day, has an interesting and beautiful girl's story, entitled "Ionie, the Pride of the Mill," in the New York Ledger of March 28th. The heroine is a charming factory girl placed in inharmonious and trying situations, where her virtue and loyalty and beauty win the hearts of the noble young son of the hard-hearted proprietor of the great factory where she is employed. In a terrible catastrophe he saves her life. All efforts to keep them apart, including a villainous rival, are shown up in the story, and the perilous experience of the young maiden, armed only with love, truth and beauty, are fully portrayed. It is a story full of heart experiences which will interest every young woman who may be fated at some time to find herself in a similar situation to Ionie. Get the New York Ledger and read this story.

THE NEW YORK TIMES.

The TIMES is a newspaper for intelligent men and women who want to read all the news of the world every day. The paper has distinguishing merits of its own. It is neither sensational nor dull. It is not sour-tempered. It is not frivolous or visionary. It sees plenty of good in the world and tells about it. It tells of the bad when it must, but not unwholesomely. It prints with fullness the record of human endeavor in many fields outside of business, politics and war—in literature, religion, science, art, sports and household matters. No paper in the country prints so many book reviews and so much book news. No paper has so complete a financial page—a daily manual for investors and officers of financial institutions. Its market reports—wool, cotton, breadstuffs, farm products, &c.—are the best in the country.

The Democracy of THE TIMES is of the old-fashioned sort—as old as Thomas Jefferson; majority rule, no bossism, no machine tyranny, the divorce of politics from private money-making, a sound currency, industrial emancipation, and every-day honesty. To promote the advance of the Democratic party along these lines it labors with heart and conscience and all its might.

THE NEW-YORK WEEKLY TIMES.

The subscription price of THE NEW-YORK WEEKLY TIMES is one dollar a year. THE WEEKLY TIMES is a capital newspaper. It contains all the current news condensed from the dispatches and reports of the daily edition, besides literary matter, discussions upon agricultural topics by practical farmers, full and accurate market reports of prices for farm produce, live stock, &c., and a carefully prepared weekly wool market.

Demorest's Magazine Free,

And what a magazine it is! For 1896 it will be more brilliant than ever before. New management, new methods, new ideas. Each copy contains an exquisite reproduction in colors of some celebrated picture by a famous artist, worthy to adorn the walls of the most refined home. It is affirmed that DEMOREST'S is the only complete Family Magazine published containing all of the most excellent points of its contemporaries, besides having inimitable features of its own. DEMOREST'S is actually a Dozen Magazines in one.

It is a Digest of Current Events and Ideas for the busy man or woman, a Review and a Store-house of Interest for all. Wives, mothers, sisters and daughters can find exactly what they need to amuse and instruct them, also practical helps in every department of domestic and social life, including the furnishing and ornamenting of the home, embroidery, bric-a-brac, artistic and fancy work of all kinds, etc., etc., and suggestions and advice regarding the well-being and dressing of their own persons.

The scope of the articles for 1895 and 1896 will cover the whole country and its various interests, and the articles will be profusely illustrated with the finest engravings, and, in addition, it will publish the best and purest fiction. It treats at length Out-of-Door Sports, Home Amusements and Entertainments; it gives a great deal of attention to Children's Department, and "Our Girls," and has a Monthly Symposium by Celebrated People, in which are discussed important questions of the hour of interest to the older readers.
